FCC Clarifies Gov't Calls Allowed Under TCPA

The Federal Communications Commission (FCC) recently released a declaratory ruling clarifying that the Telephone Consumer Protection Act (TCPA) does not apply to calls made by or on behalf of the federal government. This applies as long as the call is made in the conduct of official government businesses, except when a call by a contractor does not comply with the government's instructions.

The TCPA continues to apply to non-governmental activities, including political campaign events conducted by federal officeholders. The TCPA prohibits "any person within the United States, or any person outside the United States if the recipient is within the United States," from placing autodialed, prerecorded or artificial-voice calls to wireless telephone numbers, except with the prior express consent of the called party or in an emergency.

Prior express written consent is required for all telemarketing calls/text messages made to cell phones using an autodialer or prerecorded message. The Bipartisan Budget Act of 2015 created a TCPA exemption for calls placed solely to collect a debt owed to or guaranteed by the United States. The FCC proposed implementing regulations in May, with a final regulation expected in August.

Wendy's Admits Breach Hit 1,025 Restaurants

Dublin, Ohio-based, fast food chain Wendy's confirmed that hackers breached customer payment card data at 1,025 of its restaurants nationwide, a number considerably higher than originally believed. Wendy's said it worked with forensic experts, federal law enforcement and card industry contacts and found that specific card information (cardholder name, card number, expiration date, cardholder verification value and service code) was targeted by malware. The investigation found that the malware first hit some franchisee systems as early as fall 2015.

"We are committed to protecting our customers and keeping them informed. We sincerely apologize to anyone who has been inconvenienced as a result of these highly sophisticated, criminal cyberattacks involving some Wendy's restaurants," Todd Penegor, Wendy's president/CEO said.

"We have conducted a rigorous investigation to understand what has occurred and apply those learnings to further strengthen our data security measures."

The company also released a list of locations affected by the breach, searchable by city and state but did not specify how many customers took a hit. Cybersecurity expert Brian Krebs first reported the breach in January. In mid-May, the company announced in its first quarter financial statement that the fraud only affected 5% of stores, fewer than 300 locations. However, a number of sources in the fraud and banking community told Krebs there was no way the Wendy's breach only affected 5% of stores, given the volume of fraud the financial institutions traced back to Wendy's customers.

In June, the Michigan Credit Union League, its members and CUNA advocated for stronger merchants and card network accountability after the Wendy's restaurants breach forced several credit unions to cover associated costs. CUNA also announced it was also joining a data breach lawsuit against the restaurant chain.

According to CUNA, industry sources estimated the fraudulent charges have been even larger than in other recent data breaches such as those at Target and Home Depot, which combined cost credit unions more than $90 million.

Vicki McIntosh, president/CEO of the $21.5 million, Richmond, Mich.-based Belle River Community Credit Union, said her cooperative paid $8,000 in fraudulent charges. In addition, the credit union paid $1,000 in out-of-pocket costs to issue new cards because of the breach. McIntosh, Michigan credit union leaders and the Michigan Credit Union League CEO Dave Adams called on lawmakers to require retailers to be held to the same federal data breach standards credit unions are subject to, and to enforce the laws currently in place.

"The current system is broken, retailers big and small experience a breach and months go by without any notice to credit unions of which cards are compromised, which results in a spike in fraud losses, and once again local credit unions are left holding the bag," Adams said. "Again, we call on lawmakers and regulators to use their full authority to ensure both retailers and card network companies are doing their part to protect customer's information instead of leaving credit unions to continually shoulder the burden."

Ondrej Krehel, founder/CEO of the New York City-based LIFARS, a digital forensics and cybersecurity intelligence firm, noted, "Malware distribution is becoming a commodity, and organized crime rings are moving latterly from target to target. No one is immune, and many times the same crime group penetrates multiple networks of various enterprises."

The Wendy's chain includes about 6,500 franchise and company operated restaurants in the United States, 28 other countries and U.S. territories worldwide. Most of the U.S.-operated stores are franchises.

Identity Theft – How Does it Affect the Credit Union?

A credit union will suffer reputation risk if its procedures do not adequately protect its members and their accounts. A credit union may also suffer a financial risk if it allows an unauthorized person to access or open an account. By making certain that the credit union staff is following current law, a credit union will have significantly protected member information and helped to prevent identity theft.

When identity theft occurs, a credit union should close the member's accounts and flag the new account to alert all staff to the previous identity theft.

If a credit union experiences an attempted or successful identity theft it must complete and file a Suspicious Activity Report (SAR). List the violation as identity theft or pretext calling on the SAR.

Federal law and NCUA Rules and Regulations require all federally insured credit unions to prevent the disclosure of member information to third parties except as provided for in the credit union's mandated privacy policy. Among other things, 12 CFR Part 1016 published by the CFPB replacing Part 716 of the NCUA's Rules and Regulations, which implements the Gramm-Leach-Bliley privacy law, requires the credit union to take steps to:

- Prevent the disclosure of member information to third parties, unless an exception allowing disclosure applies.
- Ensure that third party vendors protect the confidentiality of member information.
- Have policies and procedures in place to guard against unauthorized persons using a pretext or ruse in order to obtain member information.
- Provide sufficient staff training on member privacy requirements.
